Compared to last week: .

Compared to last week: Hay prices generally steady. Trade and demand moderate at best. Cooler, fall like temperatures were reported especially in the south and central regions of the state. Soil moisture remained adequate in those areas with forages growing thanks to the tropical storm precipitation received in September. This has allowed for a larger volume of hay to be baled and allowed pasture conditions to remain in fair to good condition. East Texas remains very dry, with some areas reporting severe drought conditions. Hay producers are worried about inventories heading into the fall and winter months as yields
